WILL PUNISH THE GUILTY.

The announcement that the Mississippi prosecuting officials will make every effort to run down and punish the white hoodlums who were responsible for the recent race rioting in Kemper county makes good reading. It is good to hear the hoodlums described as hoodlums, too, and not as "prominent citizens." Another pleasant feature of the story is the statement that many of the panic-stricken negroes rushed to their white friends for protection. What is more, they were given protection.

A deputy sheriff and two citizens, knowing one of the negroes who was attacked was absolutely innocent of any wrongdoing, interposed their own bodies between him and the mob and shielded him at the risk of their lives until they were overpowered. The truth is that the decent white people of the south are the best friends the negro has. They will go to any reasonable lengths to protect him as long as he behaves himself well, and nobody is better acquainted with the fact than the negro himself.

It is greatly to be hoped that the prosecuting attorney will not relax his efforts until he shall have secured the conviction of every white outlaw concerned in the outrage. By bringing a few of them to the gallows he will do more to put a quietus on mob rule in Mississippi than all the proclamations the governor could issue in an entire term, and all the laws the legislature could enact. Lawlessness is lawlessness whether the victims are negroes or whites, and it should be suppressed as vigorously in one instance as in the other.

All the sermons that could be preached by individuals and by newspapers north of the Mason and Dixon line cannot avail to stop lynch and mob law in some of the southern states. The remedy is in the hands of the people themselves. Appreciating to the fullest extent, as we do, the difficulty of making arrests and securing convictions of those concerned in outrages committed on inoffensive negroes, we still believe that if the proper effort is made such arrests and convictions can be had, and we are sure a few of them would strike terror to the hearts of other evil doers.

THE RIGHTS OF THEATRES.

The West Publishing company of Minneapolis has compiled, from various law reporters, some interesting law on the subject of the rights of proprietors of theatres. With special reference to a New York case it says:

"Considerable attention has been attracted to the case of People ex rel. Burnham vs. Flynn, 100 New York Supplement, 31, owing to the fact that the plaintiff was a dramatic critic of a prominent paper. The basis of the action is that defendants conspired to prevent the plaintiff from exercising a lawful trade or calling. Because of criticisms made of the plays given at the various theatres, the defendants had given instructions that the critic should not be admitted, and that he had been forcibly prevented from entering after purchasing a ticket. The supreme court of New York refers to the familiar doctrine that the conducting of a theatre is a private enterprise, and that, in the absence of a statutory regulation, the proprietor has the right to say who shall enter. Under this doctrine the court states that the agreement to exclude the critic was not an unlawful one, and that if his presence was distasteful or injurious to their business the proprietors had the lawful right to exclude him."

So anybody who is considered objectionable by a theatrical manager can be excluded from a theatre under the control of that manager. This after he has purchased a ticket in the regular way. On presentation of the ticket the doorkeeper more or less politely hands it back and informs the expectant playgoer that he can have his money refunded at the box office. So we must all be very careful about what we do when we go to the theatre and what we say when we come away from it. Otherwise we may be denied, legally, mind you, the glorious privilege of seeing theatrical attractions.

Seriously, though, it is hard to believe that theatre managers would, without what they believed to be excellent cause, bar any one from their places of business. And we have the New York case in mind when we make this statement. The instance of Mr. Metcalfe is one of a very few. The Herald condemned the theatrical syndicate at that time for its action, and we still believe it was unjust, but the law says the managers have the right to bar any one whom they please, and the law must be obeyed.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

In its decisions handed down on Monday before adjournment over the holidays the supreme court enunciated important rulings of general interest. In an Illinois case it held that the state of Illinois has the right to tax property devised for charitable purposes when the property is to be used for charity outside the state. In this specific case a Chicago building was bequeathed to a Kentucky woman to the Methodist church in her state. The Illinois law expressly exempts from taxation property to be used for charitable or religious purposes, but taxes were levied upon this property because its use was not limited by bequest or intent to the boundaries of Illinois. The board of education of the Methodist church in Kentucky resisted collection of the taxes, but was defeated in the Illinois court. On appeal the supreme court sustains the lower court.

Just what effect the ruling will have on similar properties is not known yet, but it is easy to see that a far-reaching precedent has been established. For instance, it is a possible surmise that property held for foreign missions by any of the great denominations might become taxable by the state in which it is held. Or invested funds in real estate, the income of which is applied to educational and religious purposes in another state, might be taxed. Logically applied and carried to its legitimate conclusion, all income for such purposes would have to be applied in the state where held or else have to bear its share of the general burden of state taxation.

In a decision written by Justice Holmes, the supreme court takes jurisdiction of a lynching case through contempt proceedings which will be followed by prosecution of the offenders. The effect may have an important bearing on the lynching problem in the south in the future. Briefly stated, the case of a negro in Knoxville, Tenn., had been appealed to the supreme court. Impatient with delay and bent on executing the negro, a mob lynched him and the sheriff by whom he was held in custody connived at the act or was negligent after the supreme court had taken cognizance of the case. Justice Holmes holds that this was clearly in contempt of the court, and indicated the court would proceed to prosecute those who participated in the act. The prosecution, if successful, opens the way for heavy punishment of the men concerned, and in proceedings of this kind it is apt to go hard with the offenders.

Still another opinion upholds the validity of the North Carolina law prohibiting bucket-shop operations in the state, declaring the law is not repugnant to the federal constitution. The effect of the opinion is apt to be felt in similar laws and their enforcement in other states—a result much to be desired.
